Tolani A. Adeboye

Tolani A. Adeboye is a Senior Associate, Special Education at the Council of Chief State School Officers. She is co-lead of the NCLB-IDEA Collaboration Community in partnership with the National Association of State Directors of Special Education. That community of practice draws together state directors of special education, Title I, and school improvement as well as district leaders, parent representatives, and liaisons from other national education policy organizations. Previously, Ms. Adeboye co-designed and implemented professional development activities within the context of teacher learning communities.

This webinar session will give a broad overview of the community of practice concept and outline strategies for forming and sustaining communities of practice at the SEA, LEA and building levels. Examples will be offered that illustrate how cross-divisional communities can spark reform and innovation.

This webinar will contain live captioning services for those who need it. If you have any questions about this service, please let us know.
